

We are looking for two new trustees to join our board

We are recruiting two trustees with the necessary skills and experience to strengthen our board, to help us to respond to the changing needs of teaching professionals and pupils and capitalise on the growing recognition of the subject's importance.

PSHE education is currently enjoying unprecedented national attention. A recent Commons Education Select Committee inquiry recommended that it should become a statutory subject, and over 100 leading organisations support our campaign for statutory status (including six Medical Royal Colleges, two Royal Societies, the NSPCC and Barnardo's) alongside 87% of parents, 85% of business leaders and 88% of teachers.

Applicants should be driven by a desire to support an organisation that is at the forefront of promoting excellence in PSHE education and be passionate about the importance of the subject to the lives and life chances of children and young people. They should possess senior management or board-level experience and, given the breadth of PSHE education, be able to take part in debate on a range of issues that relate to the subject.

The board already includes several experienced and well-respected PSHE practitioners, so we are seeking applicants with skills and experience beyond teaching PSHE. We are particularly keen to recruit trustees who can provide a current and credible perspective on the role of PSHE education in contributing to broader educational outcomes and its role in developing the skills and attributes valued by employers.
